LAND RECORDS

ILLINOIS DATA PROJECT

The Illinois State Archives is in the process of converting data contained in manuscript land records into machine-readable form. This conversion entails approximately 300,000 individual entries scattered through the fifty volume series of tract books. The types of land involved include those sold by the Federal government's ten land district offices in Illinois and such state-sold lands as school, saline, seminary, canal, internal improvements and the Illinois Central Railroad Lands. In addition, the Archives houses the records of lands settled in Illinois deriving their title from military land warrants issued to veterans of the Revolutionary War, the War of 1812, and the Mexican and Black Hawk Wars. Each entry lists the name of the purchaser, the legal description of the tract sold, the number of acres involved, the purchase price, and the date of the transaction. In addition, the volumes relating to state land sales list the residence of the purchaser at the time of the sale.

Although the State Archives houses the records of all initial land sales made in Illinois, the data is dispersed in fifty bulky, un-indexed volumes and has been impossible to use in any comprehensive or convenient manner. Genealogists and others seeking to ascertain where and when persons purchased tracts of land in the state must provide our staff with the name of the townships and the types of land sales involved (General Land Office, School Commissioners, Canal Commissioners, etc.) for us to service their inquiries effectively. Even with this information, painstaking searches must be made through all relevant volumes to supply the information requested. Moreover, the nature of the records has kept them virtually closed to the academic community.

It is obvious that the chief obstacle to the effective use of the land records is their bulk and physical arrangement. The most feasible way to overcome this is to reduce them to machine-readable form, provide computer input, and devise programs for recalling the data in combinations that best provide the rapid extraction of the most information from them. Once the conversion is completed, it will be possible to provide all classes of patrons with a fast and efficient method to search the land records and trace initial purchases. Thus, genealogists will need to provide only minimal information for us to answer their requests and, for the first time, scholars will be able to fully exploit a very valuable source of knowledge that reflects, in the widest possible historical detail, the process by which the state was opened to settlement and development.

The end product of this conversion..a comprehensive list of all transactions and their accompanying data stored on magnetic tape, will be available to interested researchers upon request. When the project is completed users will be able to acquire data in a variety of formats. Obviously, the Archives will be able to provide information about particular individuals who purchased land as well as alphabetized printouts listing all sales information. In addition, we will provide scholars with several specialized data sets. To cite a few examples, we can offer them a list of all sales made during specific chronological periods by types of sales and by geographical location of those sales, as well as by any needed combinations of those types of information. Thus, land sales can be used to study the affects of various nineteenth century "panics" on a key indicator of economic activity, the purchase of land, and the role of the Illinois and Michigan Canal and the Illinois Central Railroad on settlement patterns in the state.

Our staff has devised a coding system for the data contained in the land records, and by using summer help under the direction of professional Archives staff members, we have coded 30,000 entries (10 percent of the approximate total of 300,000). In addition, we have received excellent cooperation from the Management Information Services Division of the Office of the Secretary of State. Its personnel have key punched the data onto magnetic tape, written a program to recall all information quickly, accurately, and comprehensively, and supplied us with an alphabetized print-out of our summer entries. Thus, we have tested both the code and the retrieval program and found them practical and useful. Applications have been submitted to secure the funding needed to complete the coding process and if they are successful, the project should be completed and the data fully available by the fall of 1976.

LETTERS TO JENNY

(A series of letters from Lucy Mary Kellogg to Jenny Hunter have been edited and published by the Detroit Society for Genealogical Research. Following is reproduced Letter XIV - Revolutionary War Pension). These letters are of infinite value to the novice and the experienced researcher as well).

Dear Jenny:

I'm delighted that you are really interested in your revolutionary ancestor and want to find out what his pension papers can tell you.

Your first step would be to try to determine whether he ever applied for a pension. See if he is listed in any of these:

- (1) House Executive Document, Vol. 3. No. 55, 1st session-16 Congress (1818 act).
- (2) Senate Documents No. 514 Pension Roll, 1st session, 23rd Congress, published 1835. (In this be sure to check each of four categories under each county).
- (3) 1841 Census of Pensioners, taken by the marshals for the 6th census.
- (4) Index of Revolutionary War Pensioners being published as a supplement to the National Genealogical Society Quarterly.

The actual examination of the pension application in the National Archives in Washington comes next. You can go to Washington and examine the papers yourself; this is the most satisfying method. Or you can secure photostats of the pension application papers. While the fee is reasonable for photostats, you might find this rather expensive, as it might involve many separate papers. If you cannot go to Washington, you can write to the General Services Administration, National Archives and Records Service, Washington, D.C. 20408, and ask for an abstract of the information for one application. You should bear in mind, however, that the number of staff workers available for work on pension and bounty land warrant files is not large enough to handle all requests for such service and no inquirer, therefore, will be furnished information on more than one veteran within a period of six months. If you have more than one name you want searched, it might be advisable to employ a searcher in Washington who is familiar with these files to abstract them for you. The National Archives will furnish a list of such persons upon request.

The envelope containing pension papers will carry a serial number with a letter prefix of "S," "W," or "R." The "S" will indicate a pensioner with service in the revolutionary forces; "W," a widow's pension; and "R," rejected. It is possible to find "R" papers indicating that a pension had been granted to the veteran and later withdrawn or a later application (of the widow) rejected. The letter indicates the status of the latest application. If under the serial number, you find "B L Wt" with certain figures added, this indicates an application for bounty land granted on the service of the veteran, usually his widow or children. It may be helpful to you to remember that the first general service pension was granted in 1818. Prior to that, individuals had secured pensions for disability or service as an officer for designated periods of time from the states, which had been assumed by the Federal government, or from the Federal government, each through a specific law for the relief of that individual. In 1818, the first general law was based on service in the Continental forces of no less than nine month's duration. This law was shortly qualified that the pensioner must be needy. About one-third of the applications approved under the Act of 1818 were later suspended "for evidence of indigence" or "not on the Continental establishment." In 1832 a more liberal law was enacted, covering many more revolutionary veterans. The year 1836 saw the first law allowing assistance to a veteran's widow and in 1838, 1843, 1844 and 1848, Congress liberalized the widow's requirements, until any widow who could prove her husband's service and her lawful marriage to that veteran could receive a pension. Most of the bounty land warrants are under a law passed in 1855.

Since most of these pension applications were made 35 or 40 or 50 years after the actual fighting, it is small wonder that papers and documentary evidence had been lost, if they had ever existed. You will find many depositions by witnesses whose relationship to the pensioner may bear study. The Pension Office ruled that witnesses must be credible and disinterested; many times a witness of the same surname turns out to be a brother, son or other close relative. A widow's application will contain the date of the pensioner's death and the date and place of marriage usually.

Residence at the time of service or the unit in which a pensioner served is often a clue as to his origin. Add this to his residence at the time of application, the agency through which payment is made, possible transfers of agency, etc., and you often have a fairly complete migration record, which can be very helpful in tracing your pensioner through land or probate records at those locations.

There is no hard-and-fast rule as to whether items of genealogical interest will appear in the pension application papers. I had occasion to examine 61 pension records of various persons of one surname last summer. Among the information in these papers I found:

For the pensioner, 5 changes of name; birth records - 23 with exact date, 3 with year only, 26 with approximate ages, 9 "no record" and 21 with the place of birth; 7 with name of father and 4 with name of mother; 14 with place and date of death and 18 more with date only.

For the pensioner's wife, 23 with full name given, 9 first name only, 5 with no name given, 2 "had no wife", 22 with no record of any wife; 7 gave exact date of her birth and 19 her approximate age (not always too accurate); 1 gave the place of birth, 2 the name of her father, and 3 gave the date and place of her death, with 2 more giving the date only. One applicant gave only the date of her marriage, but 23 gave both date and place.

Children: 7 gave the number but no names; 9 apparently named all the children, 7 of these with a Bible or family record and 4 specified "all surviving children;" 10 gave some children; 2 had "no family;" 33 gave no record.

Other Clues: out of 19 records, 12 listed brothers or sisters of pensioner or his wife; 6 named sons-in-law; 3 named grandchildren; and 3 included information on other husbands of the pensioner's widow.

Persons of same surname were listed in 14 applications but not identified. Of these 17 individuals, 4 were sons, 3 brothers, 2 fathers, 6 were close cousins, 1 a nephew and only one has not been identified as yet.

Of the 61 applicants, 19 were individuals on whom I had no data whatsoever; 8 included information from which I could identify the immigrant line; and 3 made it necessary for me to revise my record of those families. Summarizing, over half of the pensions yielded important facts and most of them added something of value to a family historian.

However, Jenny, you should read your ancestor's pension papers if only to discover the actual part he played in establishing the independence of this country. You'll take a lot more interest in him when you find he was out on a wood-cutting detail when Arnold fled West Point, but came back to help arrest a suspected confederate. You may find that he scoured the "Pickaway towns" for George Rogers Clark -- or was a steward on the sloop "Retaliation" -- or wore a militiaman's green cockade, but was on almost continuous service for six years, because he was the fifer and the musician was called out every time any of the company had details to cover.

Let me know if there's anything else I can do to be helpful.

Yours,
Lucy Mary Kellogg

RECORDS ACT AMENDED

An amendment to the State Records Act of 1957 has been passed by the Illinois General Assembly and signed into law by Governor James Thompson, to take effect January 1, 1980. The amendment removes restrictions on records that are more than 75 years old, with the exception of records protected by the provisions of the Mental Health and Developmental Disabilities Confidentiality Act.

Records that have been restricted in the past, yet which are more recent than 75 years, will be open to researchers provided that they sign an affidavit agreeing to preserve the confidentiality of any person or persons named in the records. The information contained in the records may not be exchanged with any person, firm, or corporation unless the identity of any person named in the records has been removed.

Any violation of the agreement between the user and the Secretary of State is a Class A misdemeanor, which is punishable by imprisonment in a penal institution for not more than one year or a fine not exceeding $1,000, or both.

This statutory formulation of policy regarding restrictions does much to regularize Archives relations with researchers who desire to use resources that previously were closed to the public.

A GENEALOGICAL CONUNDRUM

The following is taken from a tombstone near Paris, Virginia, dated 1848 (details vary) with the inscription:

Here lies:
Two grandmothers, with their two granddaughters;
Two fathers, with their two wives;
Two mothers, with their two sons;
Two sisters, with their two brothers;
Yet, but six corpses in all lie buried here,
All born legitimate, from incest clear.

If you can determine who are buried in this grave, let us hear from you.
