FROM THE EDITOR

Just a short note to say I'm looking forward to being Editor of the THE-A-KI-KI. I consider myself an amateur in the field of Genealogy, but I attempt to make up for my lack of experience with plenty of enthusiasm and hard work. I'd like to extend a big thank-you to Nelda for all the records she passed on to me as well as taking the time to explain the job.

As a reminder, be sure to send in your ancestor charts if you haven't already done so for publication in the THE-A-KI-KI. Also, if it's been a long time since you've updated charts already, published, please send in any updated information.

JUST A THOUGHT

George Bernard Shaw once said, "If you cannot get rid of the family skeleton, you may as well make it dance."

RECORDING ORAL HISTORIES

From the Kankakee Daily Journal, December 13, 1985

Older parents and other relatives can be a treasure trove of the past but, without a record, their experiences usually die with them. That doesn't have to be the case, says Dr. Judd Grenier, professor of history at California State University, Domingues Hills, who is an expert on oral histories and how to conduct them.

"It's almost like the old oral traditions of the primitive tribe," he said. It's the responsibility of the middle generation to take the experiences of their parents and transmit them to their children."

Nowadays, he points out, it isn't necessary to memorize lengthy family sagas to accomplish this goal - a tape recorder will do the job. But there is more to doing an oral history than just pressing the recording button, says Grenier, who offers suggestions on how to successfully record the oral histories of family members. Access and familiarity are the advantages of interviewing your parents. They may open up to you more than to a stranger. However, that very informality can cause problems, he notes.

"Parents tend to be condescending to their children and casual," he explains. "They'll not say things they think you already know. So the best situation is to interview someone you know, but who is not your parent, such as an aunt or a grandmother, to get away from the parent-child relationship."

Before you schedule the interview, write down what you want to discuss and do a nontaped talk with the person, taking notes, to gain an overview of that person's life. Using the notes, you can develop a list of topics to ask about. There are three general subject areas to tackle in such an interview, Grenier said. First there are routine personal items such as where they were born, who their parents were, where they went to school and where they worked.

Then there are common denominator historic experiences: for those born in 1910, for example, the interviewer should ask about their recollections of such events as World Wars I and II, the introduction of the automobile, the Jazz Age, Prohibition, the Depression, the presidents they lived under and where they were during such pivotal occurrences as the bombing of Pearl Harbor. The third category of questions concerns what is special about that particular person, Grenier said,

"Blend the three types of questions together in a topical outline, and shown the outline to the person you will interview, who can then make suggestions on what else to cover; but don't prepare specific questions. "Then you are entrapped by the questions. You will get stilted, formal replies. You have to be prepared to abandon the interview outline any time something exciting comes up. The outline is just to get you going."

Before starting the interview, become familiar with your recording equipment and make sure it is working, Grenier cautions. If possible, sit across a table from the subject and place the microphone in the middle so the volume and pitch levels will remain constant.

"Try to disguise or hide the tape recorder. People talk to the tape recorder as if it were a camera instead of to the interviewer." The interview should take place in an informal, relaxed setting with no other people or distractions such as the telephone in the room, he said. In addition to taping, the interviewer should take notes. This will give you accurate spellings of names and places, Grenier said.

Don't ask more than one question at a time. Don't ask long questions, which makes the interview more stilted." And avoid questions that can be answered by a simple yes or no, since many people will then not elaborate. "Use the old 'who, what, where, why and how'. Those can't be answered yes to no.

The professor also advises people not to prolong the interview for more than an hour, because the interviewer tends to tire. "But a lot of elderly people can talk hours upon hours - they don't wear out. Break the interview up into blocks. It gives you time to listen to the first hour to follow up in the second hour. After the interview is over, more work lies ahead, Grenier warns.

"If preserving a historic record for your children, they may want to hear their grandfather's words, nuances, laughter. The maximum technique of preserving the interview is to do a full transcription to keep along with the tape." Once you've gotten the hang of oral histories, you may discover that history is more than just doings of the famous, that everyday people also play valuable roles in history, he explains.

"An interview with an individual is more than just an individual story. It's very often the story of a whole group of people who have undergone similar changes and developments in their lives," Grenier said. "If you interview one person you may find out if they were part of a wave of immigration from Europe to America or from the East Coast to the West Coast."

Saving the past in the form of oral histories will also provide a link from one generation to the next. "You do oral histories for the same reason Alex Haley searched for his roots in Africa," Grenier said. "It provides a sense of belongin of identity. It gives you a place in space and time."

FIRST WHITE MEN

.... from Iroquois County Times, Watseka, IL, October 13, 1877

In April, 1830, George Courtright came to Iroquois County. Already here were Noel Vasseur, who kept the trading post for Guerdon S. Hubbard; a man named Shobar; and a half-breed Frenchman named Baptiste Champaign who lived with the Indians. Courtright settled near Bunkum. At this time there was no Chicago - only a Fort Dearborn. It was an 80-mile trip that took six weeks round trip. There were no roads.

GREAT-GREAT-GREAT-GREAT-GRANDPA FOUGHT IN THE REVOLUTIONARY WAR

From The Daily Journal, Kankakee, Illinois, October 6, 1985

WATSEKA - Back in 1838 when Ann Fry applied for a government pension because her husband was a veteran of the Revolutionary War, she suffered a humiliation that was not rectified for 147 years.

The tombstone of her husband, Benjamin Fry, will finally be accorded the honors due a Revolutionary War soldier through the efforts of his great-great-great-granddaughter, Sheila Richards of Watseka. It has taken her six years of research but she has finally proved that her ancestor fought in 1776.

The Sauk Trail Chapter of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution will conduct a ceremony to that effect at 1 p.m. October 13. An American flag will be placed for the first time on Fry's tombstone at Liberty Cemetery, north of Iroquois, with his local descendants in attendance.

Miss Richards knew from family lore that Benjamin Fry fought in '76 but she needed proof so his name could be included in the rolls of the DAR. She has nine such veterans in her background, but he is the only one buried in Iroquois County. "I'm thrilled to death", Miss Richards said of her success. "It's been a lot of work. I guess that's what makes it worthwhile."

When Mrs. Fry applied for her husband's pension, she was refused. The government pension bureau mistakenly said the money had already been claimed in a land bounty before he died. The bureaucracy prevailed, though. Mrs. Fry never received the pension. And, as a result of that decision of the early 1800's, Benjamin Fry's name had never been entered on the rolls of the Daughters of American Revolution. The DAR required proof that the soldier fought in the Revolutionary War and the refusal of the pension was a stumbling block in providing that proof, Miss Richards says. So, six years ago, she set out to prove the bureau made a mistake 141 years earlier.

She began her research with old wills and family records. She studied government documents. She was finally able to prove that the bureau awarded the land grant pension to the wrong Benjamin Fry. The one who claimed the grant named a brother Gabriel in his credentials. Miss Richards has been able to prove that 'her' Benjamin Fry had no brother Gabriel. Although the pension bureau in Washington refused to change its records, the documentation was enough to convince the DAR.

"I took all the documentation to them and got them to cancel what was incorrect in their records," she says. In doing the research, Miss Richards learned several interesting facts about her ancestor. He was born in Virginia in 1758. He served in the Pennsylvania militia with his uncle and cousins. He later moved away from the family, relocating to Ohio with his first wife, whose name is not recorded. Miss Richards is descended from Abraham Fry, a twin born to the couple in 1788.

In Ohio, Benjamin Fry made his fortune by operating a grist mill and buying land. Miss Richards says he must have been wealthy because he bought land but didn't claim his pension land bounty. That made it hard to prove his Revolutionary War service later. "If he had claimed his land bounty there would have been no problem," Miss Richards said. "But he was wealthy and didn't need the money because he bought land wherever he lived."

He apparently built that wealth on money or property his father gave him early, because in the father's will Ben and his brother Isaac were left just a dollar each. "I cannot leave them more by them having had their share before," their father explained.

In 1802, Benjamin married Ann Cadwalder who is descended from the Pennsylvania Cadwalders, famous for their furniture manufacturing business, said Miss Richard! A Quaker, Miss Cadwalder was thrown out of the pacifist Society of Friends for marrying outside the faith and because her husband had fought in the war. When the two moved to near the village of Iroquois in 1837, they joined their son, Benjamin F. Fry, who had moved here in 1830. He is written up in Beckwith's History of Iroquois County, published in 1880, as one of the first pioneers to brave the dangers of life among the Indians. He worked for fur trader Gurdon Hubbard.

Shortly after their arrival, Benjamin died and was buried in the Liberty Cemetery. His descendants are now entitled to add to it a bronze marker embossed in bas relief with "The Spirit of '76". And the tombstone, neglected for so many years, will at last be among those decorated on patriotic holidays. "I can never remember seeing a flag on that stone on patriotic days but now I will," she says.

HOME HINTS & HAPPENINGS

From The Daily Gazette, Kankakee, Illinois, February 20, 1868

One year ago occurred the great ice-flood in the Kankakee River, which destroyed a large amount of property, and swept away numerous bridges along its course. These bridges have all been repaired or rebuilt, the damages made good, and the Kankakee "flows on" as usual, only that people say that it's "tremendously dry". Be that as it may, we are sure that we haven't lost it entirely, seeing that our 8 months drought hasn't swallowed it up quite as clean as it may do yet before we get rain.

From The Daily Gazette, Kankakee, Illinois, February 20, 1868

We learn that F. Swannell has contracted with D.D.L. McCulloch for 100,000 bricks with which to erect his new block on the corner of Court Street (opposite Hobbie block) and Schuyler Ave. in the spring. Mr. Swannell has also had hauled upon the ground a great many cords of stone, during the winter, for basement and cellar walls. He will commence the work early as the season will allow.
