History Tidbit

In the year 1723 the State of Illinois was bought from ten Indian Chiefs representing ten tribes by 22 white men of PA and England. The territory was in two tracts. one called Southern Illinois, the other called Northern Illinois. The consideration was 200 strouds, 260 blankets, 360 shirts, 150 lbs of stroud breech-cloth, 500 lbs of gun powder, 4,000 lbs of lead, one gross of knives, 30 lbs of Vermillion, 2,000 gun flints, 200 lbs tobacco. 2 doz. gartering, 10,000 lbs. flour, 5,000 bushels Indian corn, 12 horses, 12 horned cattle, 20 bushels salt, 20 guns. The articles were paid and delivered in full council. The deed was signed and executed before a French notary public at Kaskaskia village exchange. (McHenry Co. GS-IL X.6)

Lutheran Ancestors

The Concordia Historical Institute, Dept. of Archives & History, 801 DeMun, St. Louis, MO 63103 is extremely helpful when trying to track down your Lutheran ancestors in the U.S. They can help you located what churches were functioning in a particular area and where the records are located if the church is defunct. They offer membership in their Institute which gives you discount research rates. You'll receive a newsletter and quarterly. Although they have much history on the Lutheran Church in America, their main interest is the Missouri Synod Church (submitted by Marguerite Butzow, Archives Assistant, Champaign Co. GS, Vol. 22 #1).

MANTENO MORSELS - 1878

Taken from The Kankakee Gazette, November 21, 1878.

Dr. E. P. Catlin has sold his residence, office and practice to Dr. Ellingwood. Dr. Catlin has gone to Rockford, we understand. Dr. Ellingwood takes possession immediately.

The Rev. George Winslow, M.E. minister here, held his first quarterly meeting last Sunday. Mr. Winslow has but lately been stationed here, but has made many friends in the short time he has been with us.

G. C. Merrick has a new two-story front just finished on his farm near town. The job was done on contract by M. R. Peters. The Dr. will move in the Spring, so we are told. H. N. Kinney has been making improvements in the shape of a cattle barn. Myron Bailey has a new and commodious corn barn just completed.

Wm. Vanderwater has returned from Valparaiso, where he has been attending school, and has gone away on a four months' whaling voyage.

The M.E. church has put up a new 8-inch stovepipe. We were cremated last Sunday thereby.

Z. E. Marceau lost his little baby boy last Monday night.

Merts & Allen shipped a number of car loads of hogs at $2.30 per hundred.

New corn is coming in to market at 23 cents. Most of it that we have seen has been sound and good.

Dec. 10 - A little boy seven years old of Patrick Eagan died from the effects of being burned while playing with some fire which he and some other children had built in the field and was buried today.

Mrs. Canaday, an old lady, died last night.

Geo. Shreffler, of Rockville, had a horse quite badly cut up Monday evening by getting frightened at the cars and jumping onto a hitching post, where he was tied in front of one of the stores.

A new windmill swings to the breeze at E. Wright's.

A festival is promised us In the M.E. church on the evening of the 19th. We understand there will be lots of good things such as turkey and all the wherewiths to go with it, furnished for the occasion and as for the cakes and such like no one knows better than the Manteno ladies how to get them up. A good time is anticipated.

IMMIGRANTS TRANSFORMED FACE OF LABOR IN AMERICA

Submitted by Nelda Ravens from The Kankakee Daily Journal, May 31, 1992.

Between 1880 and 1924, more than 20 million immigrants poured into the United States. They not only transformed the face of America's laboring population, but also were transformed by America, says James Barrett, a history professor at the University of Illinois.

Immigrants and their families were consciously "Americanized" and often from "the bottom up" by fellow employees, and by union and political party members. In its early stages, the movement focused on naturalization and the right to vote for men. Later it expanded to include many elements of everyday life, including the immigrant mother's duties in the home and her "crucial role in producing a second-generation of 'true Americans'.

The Americanization movement turned into a "mindless patriotic frenzy" during World War I and became "a kind of crusade, as employers, nationalists groups and various state and federal agencies sought to remold the values and behavior of immigrant workers and their families". Scholars have paid little attention to the role experienced Immigrant and native-born workers played in acculturating newcomers. Such an investigation is critical for an understanding of class formation in the United States.

Many of the immigrants' teachers were older, more experienced, sometimes politicized workers who conveyed different notions of what was right or wrong in the workshop and in the U.S. as a society. It is not surprising, then, that many immigrants became politically active and joined radical political parties.

In coal mining, steel, clothing manufacturing, slaughtering and meat packing and elsewhere, organizers, business agents and shop stewards faced the task of conveying to the immigrant the specific goals, strategies and structures of the labor movement. Barrett argues that in the Chicago stockyards and elsewhere, an immigrant's introduction to the American political and economic system came "not through night school classes but through discussion and debate at union meetings (with interpreters), informal conversations with fellow workers, and labor movement publications, often printed in various languages".

The Book/Library Committee have purchased so far this year "Chicago Crabgrass Communities" by Harvey Karlen and "1900 Census Abstracts of French Canadian Families of the .Plains and Upper Mountain States" by Father Ledoux.

The society decided to remove it's publications from the Kankakee Public Library and these are currently being removed from the library's computer indexes and will be moved to the Bourbonnais Library.

The May Meeting will be arechecking of the Essex Township Cemetery records. The final sections of the Mound Grove Cemetery are also being checked and that book should be completed this summer. Completion of the cemetery records is the highest priority project this year but we're also working on the 1870 Census, School-Records, Ancestor Book, Asbury United Methodist Church Records and Manteno United Methodist Church Records.

Courthouse birth, marriage and death certificates now cost $7.00 each.

Joseph Chevallier's and Angelique Chevallier's lay within what is now Kankakee county, and with the exception of these reservations the country became open to settlement, and the emigrants did not wait a second bidding, nor even the ratifying of the treaty by Congress, but were on the ground about as quick as the returning braves, who came from the great council where the treaty was made."

"The reservations in our county were located principally upon the north side of the Kankakee river: the Mesawkequa, Washington-Bourbonnais and Jacques Jouveman extending over to the south side. They formed an almost unbroken line, from two miles east of the present village of Waldron to the west line of the town of Rockville, and included the choicest land, and the great bulk of the timber in the country. Three large Indian villages were located within them; one in the Me-saw-ke-qua, called Waisuskucks, above Waldron, on the south side of the river; Soldier's Village, on Soldier's Creek, where Kankakee now stands; the third, Sha-wa-nas-see's village, in his reservation just north of the farm now owned by Mr. Timothy Dickinson, in Bourbonnais, in the Rock Creek timber. It was here that the last great Indian council was held, that took place in this county, in 1830. Although the Indians ceded their lands by the above treaty, in 1832, it was only by subsequent treaties made, that provision was made for their removal west, about 1836. Noel Le Vasseur was agent for the government who superintended the removal of those in this county. The government gave them a large reservation near Council Bluffs, Iowa, in that portion of the state included in a county bearing their tribal name. This was before the days of railroads and telegraphs in this state, and when the tribe was once removed from their old haunts, those holding reservations soon followed, anti to the settlers, rapidly pouring into the new land of promise, these reservations were very much coveted, and soon fell into the hands of the Indian traders, whose wares and merchandise the Indian so much loved, and a few years after their removal witnessed their choicest land converted into productive farms."

"The said tribe having been the faithful allies of the United States during the late contest with the Sacs and Foxes, in consideration thereof the United States agrees to permit them to hunt and flab on the lands ceded, as also on the lands of the government on Wabash and Sangamon rivers, so long as the same shall remain the property of the United States.

"In testimony whereof, the commissioners and chiefs, headmen and warriors of the said tribe, have hereunto set their hands at the place and on the day aforesaid."

"Thereupon follows a list of the signers, being beside the Commissioners and the Interpreters (among the latter was Gurdon S. Hubbard) sixty-one chiefs and head men. A list is appended of the claims to be paid, according to the Fourth Article, wherein it appears Gurdon S. Hubbard was to receive $5,573, and Noel Le Vasseur $1,800. It will be seen, from a perusal of the treaty, that for our valley the government paid an adequate price, and that whatever injustice may, at other times, have been clone, here there was none. It world also seem from the context of the treaty, that horse stealing was not `put an entire stop to on both sides,' as provided for by General St. Clair's treaty of 1789, and that the stolen horse flesh was well paid for by Uncle Sam."

"Of the above named reservations, Mesawke-qua's, Catfish Bourbonnais,' Mawteno's, Francis Levia's, Wa-is-ke-shaw's, Shawanassee's, Nancy and Sally Countryman's, J. B. Chevallier's,

CHAPTER IV

Early Settlers—Noel Le Vasseur, the first White Settler—Dr. Hiram Todd, Augustus M. Wylie, Gurdon S. Hubbard and John Robert Kinzie Acquire Large Tracts—Reminiscences of Pioneer Days.

So exhaustive is Mr. Paddock's article that writers who follow him necessarily must touch his sure foundations under nearly every phase of the country's growth, no matter how much our individual impressions may color, or personal experience enlarge, his wealth of information. Names and places have assumed a fixed familiarity, and the majority of the incidents will differ only in the manner of their telling. History being a continuous story, our responsibility diverted into deeper channels only upon the laying aside of the pen of the older narrator.

Many causes contribute to the almost invariable controversy surrounding the first actual settler in any community. As the years lend distance and romance to his arrival, the honor becomes a coveted one, more especially if the settlement has utilized its most enlightening opportunities. In like manner, his chances for receiving proper credit for his courage and initiative are materially lessened. All who knew him eventually must join the vanishing cavalcade, and unless they have transmitted, through history, their knowledge of him, the haze of uncertainty must gather around his name. It was the privilege of the writer to know personally, for many years, the first white settler of Kankakee county. His name was Noel Le Vasseur, and his coming antedates by a year at least, that of Gourdon S. Hubbard, whose own frank admission lends substance to this statement. Living as neighbors for nearly thirty years in Bourbonnais township; as a young man receiving innumerable favors from the thrifty old trader of the wilderness, and eventually establishing a closer tie than that of Friendship through the marriage of his oldest son to a daughter of Mr. Le Vasseur, would tend to accuracy and breadth upon the question at issue. Moreover, the writer on many occasions conversed with Mr. Le Vasseur upon the hopes and anti-ambitions of his early days, personally learned his attitude towards the Indians, and his desire to follow his long years as a trader by large purchases of land, upon which to found a colony of his countrymen, and bring to its greatest usefulness the fertility of the prairies. With the removal of the Indians to Iowa terminated forever his business as a trader and naught remained for him to do but settle down on the land vacated by the Redmen and devote his energies to agriculture. Long experience as a merchant gave him a command of the situation which otherwise he would have been unable to obtain, and he further acquainted himself with prevailing conditions among the tribes through several of his intimate friends who had married squaws, among whom were Francis Bourbonnais, Jacques Jenveau, Francis Leveille and Chevalier La Framboise. Mr. Hubbard states that he sold to Mr. Le Vasseur his stock of goods at Iroquois, in March, 1832, and that the latter removed to Bourbonnais the same year, having spent all of the time since his arrival in 1822 at Bunkum; within a few miles of the southern boundary of Kankakee county. Mr. Le Vasseur was a central figure at the councils preceding and including the great council held by all of the tribes at the village of the great Chief Shawanasse, at Rock Creek in 1832, and in 1836, as government agent, he directed the reluctant feet of the Redmen from the hunting ground of their dusky sires to that part of Iowa which, in their honor, since has been known as Pottawatomie county.

THOSE WHO ACQUIRED LAND

Naturally Mr. Le Vasseur had an advantage over other purchasers when it came to buying up the Indian lands, and of this he availed himself, purchasing the Mesheketeno, Francis Leveille, Jacques Juneau and Josette Beaubien reservations at Bourbonnais. Dr. Todd bought the Shawanasse and Jean B. Chevalier reservations at Rock Creek, and Augustus M. Wylie became the owner of the Mesawkequa reservation at Aroma. Mr. Hubbard, and John and Robert Kinzie, who had been Mr. Le Vasseur's partners, bought of the Indians all that was left within the limits of what now is Kankakee county, but never occupied their premises. The owners of these reservations were men of good business ability, and while necessarily somewhat venturesome, possessed energy, courage and forethought. There was everything to inspire to worthy effort. Never did fairer lands stretch before the gaze of pioneers. The beautiful Kankakee sang its siren song of hope and possibility through greater fertility than their imagination could conceive, and its tributary water courses were lined with timber, representing practically all varieties known in the Central west. These wooded sections proved the salvation of later as well as early arrivals, for, without timber, settlement had been difficult and impracticable, as the Indians owned all of the rest of the timber land. Intervening years have more than justified the faith of these forerunners of civilization; coal and stone resources have developed in enormous quantities, agriculture and manufacturing interests have risen to the demands of an intelligent and progressive people, and its many sided surplus awaits whatever of ability and ambition shall stray within its borders. Its highways, the infallible indicators of a community's general status, compare favorably with much older localities in the East, many miles leading through Bourbonnais township to the Manteno and Rockville lines having already been constructed of crushed stone from the quarries. Manteno, Ganer, Momence, Aroma, Limestone and Kankakee townships maintain special supervision over their arteries of trade and travel, and the roads in these townships are kept in splendid condition.

FAMILIES OF EARLY SETTLERS.

The Vasseur settlement progressed but slowly at first. Shortly after the arrival of the Pounder came Thomas Durham, his wife and nine children, five daughters and four sons, settling on a farm adjoining that of Mr. Le Vasseur to the south. Both farms extended through a fine belt of timber to the river, comprising much of the present site of Bradley. Mr. Durham, with his large family, was quite an acquisition to the neighborhood and he soon after was followed by William

Baker, father of the late Joseph and Austin Baker, and of Isaac Baker, who still is living. The Bakers settled on the sand hill near to Baker Creek, on the road between Kankakee and Waldron, in 1832. Soon after came Dr. Hiram Todd, father of H. Church Todd, of the late Major W. W. Todd, and Mrs. Dr. Bowen, of Chicago. Dr. Todd purchased of the Indians their reservation at Rock Village, and died thereon in 1848. About 1833, the Beebes, Mellns, Byrns, Lowers and others arrived and located on the river at Shobar Crossing, the first settlement in the town of Aroma, and soon after came the Wadleys, Leggs, and Augustus M. Wylie. In 1834 Enoch and Asher Sargent, Robert Hill, Colonel Worcester, the Perrys, Orson Beebe, A. S. Vail and several others located further up the river, near where the city of Momence since has been built. In 1834-5 came John Worrell, who settled at Wortell Grove, near Exline; Robert, Jephtha and Alonzo Hawkins, who settled on the south bank of the Kankakee, and who became the first residents of the town of Limestone. Next came Robert B. Hill, Samuel Johnson, Peter Lowe, Thomas Hatton, John Flageole, William Rantz and Samuel Davis, the last two locating at Bourbonnais. Aaron Reid and Major David Bloom settled at Rock Creek. John and William Hayhurst and Devitt Slawter made settlement at Yellowhead between 1835-40, and, during the same period, came David Perry, Judge Orson Beebe, William Nichols and Phillip Worcester. Mr. Worcester, in company with David Perry, erected a sawmill at the old dam, opposite the site of the town of Bradley. The same year (1834-5) came Oliver, Marshal], John and Samuel Beebe, Elijah Thompson, Egbert Ostrander, H. S. Bloom, James and Thomas R. Van Meter, I. D. and William Legg, L. P. Farley, A. Marcott, A. L. Miner, John and William Smith, Mrs. Andrew Mann, with her father's family, Mr. Robinson, Abraham Beeble, William Beebe, Ichabod Stoddard, George Exline, Jonathan Uran, W. B. Hess, Mrs. Robert Hawkins, James Mix, James Graham, Caleb Wells, Ansel Briton, James Smith, William Richardson, R. C. Kite, Archibald Morrison, Paul Hathaway, John Morrison, Leslie Hatton, Nathaniel Coffinbury, H. Church Todd, Lyman Wooster, Cornelius and John Case,

J. B. Hayhurst, Jr. James and Volney Dickey. In 1841 came Alexander Barehim, N. W. Stetson, F. S. Campbell, R. H. Hawker, P. H. Seager, Samuel Vining, John Alfred, Sr., Addison and Polk Mann, Eli Bergeron and his four sons and three daughters, Eli Boisvert, Jean Savoie and family of several children, one of whom was Captain C. O. Savoie; Louis Savoie and family, M. D. Hunter, Uncle Benjamin Morse, Medor, Andrew and John Martin, and two of their brothers. Prominent among the arrivals of 1842 was Roswell Nichols, who came from St. Lawrence county, New York, with his seven sturdy sons and two daughters, settling on the south bank of the Kankakee. Of the sons, Argyle, Judd, Bailey and Albert, live in Kankakee; Charles H. is a resident of Joliet; Roswell lives in Chicago; and Frank A. still owns and occupies a portico of the old homestead. Hattie C., the oldest daughter became the wife of Otis Durfee, both of whom are deceased. She was the mother of Sidney R. Durfee, health officer of Kankakee, and of Edward A. Durfee, of the circuit clerk's office. Anna, the youngest daughter of Mr. Nichols, also is deceased, as is her husband, Dr. Cameron. Another prominent pioneer, Moise Legris, Sr., came from St. Leon, Canada, in 1836, and, settling in the town of Bourbonnais, assisted its settlement by building a log house, which he operated as a tavern for the accommodation of settlers who were looking for homes. Mr. Legris became the head of a large family, of whom Joseph Legris accumulated quite a fortune in Bourbonnais, where he died in 1887. Antoine Bergeron is the only survivor in a family of seven children who came to Bourbonnais in 1835. He has reared five boys to useful careers, of whom Dr. Victor A. married Elizabeth, daughter of George R. Letourneau; Achilles is pastor of Notre Dame Catholic church in Chicago; J. Z. is a physician of Chicago; Eugene is a practicing physician of Kankakee, and George is in the shoe business in Chicago.

Regret is felt that want of space prevents the rightful placing in this narrative of every man whose labor contributed to the early up-building of Kankakee county. Patience and endurance, qualities less common in the working world of today, were a necessity to the men who came from afar to pin their faith on a country of which they knew little, and which was to exact from them the best brain, and heart and muscle of which they were capable. To some extent their experiences have figured in history, song and story, yet how great a contribution to American literature might come from one, who dipping his pen in truth and actualities, caused to appear within his pages in the varied capacities which they tilled in life, the motley throng which cause to conquer the wilderness of this county. Hither gravitated many quaint and picturesque characters, some accompanied by genies or varied talents; many repose aims were sordid, and many who knew no guile. With equal fidelity to purpose, the forgiving one and the harbinger of revenge played their parts; the weak and strong, happy and discontented, philosopher and complainer, passed each other upon the highways of the erstwhile hunting ground of a courageous people.

KANKAKEE' CITY'S FIRST FAMILY

How fine a character study was Abram. True, who, coming from Lawrenceburg, Ind. with his family of eight children, built and conducted the "Half Way House" on what now is Maple street, the only other habitation in Kankakee at that time being the log house of Francis Bourbonnais. Three of the children of this pioneer survive: Mrs. Joseph Baker, Mrs. McIntosh, Mrs. Frank Donovan and Benjamin True. The tall and erect figure and military bearing of Mr. True still is clearly defined through the haze of years. He represented the most patriotic element in the community, and after his death was sadly missed from the Fourth of July celebrations, when he usually appeared at the head of the procession, standing in the end of a lumber wagon, and playing the fife or snare drum. Some idea of the discouragements and peculiarities surrounding this and other early settlers of the county may be gained from the statements of pioneers at the early settler's meeting, in July, 1881.

The writer, who was present at this meeting, heard from a pioneer that, at a religious gathering in his settlement, the preacher announced that the next meeting of the congregation would be held at the same place and hour four weeks from the following Sunday, providing that it was not a good coon day. Preachers in those days were on the nomadic order, and thriftily turned their attention to other occupations as well as guiding the spiritual destinies of their flocks. That a proper regard for coon hunting was among the list of desirable human virtues, seems to have been accepted by at least one man of the cloth.

Robert Hawkins relates that he came to Limestone in 1834 with his brother, Jephtha bringing provisions from Vermilion county. A skillet and a coffee pot comprised their original kitchen outfit, and to this they added a trough made of hickory bark in which to mix their bread. Elijah Thompson had a small house and clearing near the present home of Mr. Graves, not far from Kankakee, and on the south side of the river. Thomas Hatton, who lived two or three miles down the river, at this meeting told of Francis Bourbonnais, Sr., building a log cabin near the river bank close to the ground now occupied by the F. D. Radeke Company's brewery. Contrary to general belief, Francis Bourbonnais was not an Indian, but he married one, and in consequence his children, having Indian blood in their veins, were granted reservations by the government. The fact that his wife was the daughter of a great chief gave old Mr. Bourbonnais dignity and standing with the tribe, and he was freely admitted to their councils, although not permitted a voice in their discussions. He exerted quite an influence on the outside, however, but, not being given any land himself, followed the tribe with his family to Council Bluffs, Iowa, in 1836. Mr. Hawkins said that perk and bread comprised the bill of fare of the settlers until potatoes were grown. There were few horses at that time, and these were driven with reins made of hickory bark. These lines were buried in the ground at night to keep them moist and pliable. The plow and harness of one of these early settlers would be valued as a curiosity, and would bring a large sum of money. During his first season in the wilderness, Mr. Hawkins broke twelve or fourteen acres of land, seeding it to fall wheat with such crude tools as were procurable. Wheat at that time brought from fifty to seventy-five cents a bushel, corn was worth twenty to thirty cents, and oats fifteen to twenty cents per bushel. These commodities were all sold to the settlers for about the prices charged in the Chicago markets, as far as could be ascertained. Chicago at that time was regarded as a very muddy and unwholesome center of activity, and the difficulty of reaching it was too well understood by the pioneers for anyone to cherish a desire to undertake the journey.

KANKAKEE ORIGINALLY CALLED BOURBONNAIS.

Case Wadley, who was born October 6, 1806, related that he came to Indianapolis in 1822, to the Wabash country, in Indiana, in 1823, and to old Bunkum in 1828, as an employee of the American Fur Company, under Gurdon S. Hubbard. In 1834 he opened up a farm of one hundred acres for old Mr. Bourbonnais, and erected a log house near the present residence of H. E. Taylor. The site of Kankakee then was called Bourbonnais, being a continuation of that reservation further down the river. Mr. Wadley located a claim at Bloom's Grove, and the first year planted about ten acres to corn. The corn was carefully guarded by the Indians, with whom Mr. Wadley had become on friendly terms while in the employ of the fur company. He afterward took a claim that ran to the banks of the river, and near the gravel pit, which he eventually sold to Abraham Peltier and father of Dr. Peltier of St. Anne. Antoine Marcotte came to Chicago in 1836, and to Bourbonnais in 1839. At that time all crops were hauled to Chicago over the prairie, mostly by ox team, the settler bringing back building material and such provisions as he could not raise on his land. This was a five or six days' trip, the traveler camping out by the road side. A load of grain netted about seven dollars, so that little remained in the pockets of the farmer after his purchases had been made.

When the history of 1883 was written Robert Stearman was seventy-six years old. He came to the town of Bunkum in 1839, soon after removing to Momence, where he found several small families making a scant livelihood on small farms. 1844 is recalled as the wettest season in the history of the county. It rained so constantly and long that business was almost entirely suspended. At this time the humble coffee mill enlarged its sphere of usefulness and took on the dignity of a grist mill, about six bushels of wheat being thus converted into flour. It was necessary to begin at daylight in order to have enough flour for breakfast, and then one had to continue in order to supply the needs of the rest of the day. Mr. Stearman's wife sifted the flour through muslin, in the absence of bolting cloth, and this flour, with meat and potatoes, was the extent of the larder supplies for four or five months. At this time the nearest mill was two miles south of Lafayette, Ind., and from six to eight days were required to make the trip. A wonderful advance in convenience was recognized when the mill was built at Wilmington, as only four days were spent on the road. A quarterly meeting was held at Ash Grove, Iroquois county, in 1844, and Mr. Stearman and three of his neighbors undertook to attend. Their first unpleasant experience was a yawning opening where formerly had been the bridge near Watseka, and they were obliged to construct a temporary bridge of poles and branches. After much delay and hard work the party resumed its journey, only to find, upon reaching the house of Esquire Rush, that that worthy gentleman had naught with which to feed them, and no place to keep them. Nothing daunted, they at length came to the house of another settler, who, though he had no prepared food, had a quantity of unground buckwheat. Again the adaptive coffee mill was pressed into service, and by nightfall sufficient flour had been ground to meet the needs of several people.

Anything but encouraging conditions greeted the arrival in Rockville of Mrs. Johnson Mann and the rest of her father's family, May 6, 1840. This company of twenty-two souls took up its residence in a log house of which the necessary architectural feature, a door, was missing. This neglect on the part of the builder was met by placing the wagon bottom against the opening and putting the chest in front of it, to keep the wolves from carrying off, during the night, the food prepared for the morning meal. At this time there were seven families located between the log house and Momence, and the post office was four miles away, at the home of Dr. Todd. To reach Momence one traveled southeast, leaving to the right Bourbonnais, which then was quite a settlement, having a post office kept by Jacob Russell, in what now is the Oliver Frazer house. While this house bears no resemblance to the pioneer structure, having been rebuilt by Mr. Letourneau, who occupied it nearly forty years, it is in part the same, and stands on the identical spot of the original building.

EARLY FARMS NOW BUSTLING CITIES

Among the Chicago recruits of 1834 was George Legg, who came from Green Castle, Ind., with his family of six children. William and Benjamin Legg came from Chicago to the Kankakee valley in 1837, to raise a crop of grain for the support of the rest of the family when the latter should join them in the fall. The brothers worked fifty acres of land belonging to Mr. Hubbard and boarded with Joseph Wilkins, son-in-law of Thomas Durham, who occupied a log house on the farm of Gordon S. Hubbard. Daniel T. VanMeter eventually became owner of this farm, and it constituted a part of the present site of Bradley, and of the public square and courthouse of Kankakee. At this time a very limited amount of land was ready for cultivation. Of this, William Baker, who lived between Waldron and Rock Creek, on the north side of the river, had about fifty acres; Francis Bourbonnais a hundred acres; Thomas Durham twenty acres; Mr. Le Vasseur had plowed up a large tract where the Catholic church, College and Convent now are built in Bourbonnais, and was the most extensive owner of cultivated land thereabouts, having nearly a section fenced, extending from the Durham corner north beyond his house, the latter erected near the present town hall of Bourbonnais; Henry Bouche and Dominique Bray had a few acres of plowed land apiece; Uncle Samuel Davis had twenty acres; and Case Wadley had about ten acres on the river, near the old gravel pit. The community then consisted of Noel Le Vasseur, William Boher, Thomas Durham, Geomaid Payn, Joseph Wilkins, Case Wadley, Henry Bouche, Dominique Bray, Samuel Davis, David Bloom, and a family
