INTRODUCTION
MOMENCE OF THE OLD FRONTIER

Reprinted from Tales of an Old "Border Town" and Along the Kankakee by Burt S. BURROUGHS, Copyrighted 1925

Naturally, force was the dominant note in the affairs of men in the days of the old frontier in and about Momence. Such has been the case in all lands and in all places before society crystallized sufficiently to establish law and order. When these men who know no law let down in the strenuous life, as was often the case, and sought the sociability of the border grog shops and gambling dens of the little river town of Momence on the Kankakee, it may well be surmised that "the lide" as we say in this day, was not merely tilted to a comfortable angle, but removed entirely--thrown in the river. Come to think of it, Momence had no such thing as "a lid" until long after these frontier types had passed on. Ah, but those were wild and tumultuous days and nights in the old town 'round about 1849 and for many years thereafter! Coureurs de bois, voyageurs, Indiana, trappers, hunters, gamblers, thieves, spotters--all the riff-raff of the wide, wide wilderness mingled indiscriminately in the public houses, all more or less sodden with whiskey. These men of the border who endured much and worked hard, also played hard once the notion struck them.

There were men who, after having spent days in these Bacchanlian orgies, shouldered their packs and hit the up-river trails to some lone cabin set in a bayou, were never heard from again. There were feuds in the old days and the penalty of a wrong was death! The answer to many it disappearance would have been the echo of a rifle shot--a dull splash in the river. The woods never babble of the secrets they hold and the river, undisturbed, flows on and croons of lighter things than death. Only the unfolding of the Judgement Book will solve the mysteries of the upper river of which men talled and gossiped and speculated and then--forgot.

According to the recollection of some of the older citizens Sunday was not observed at all. The saw-mill ran as usual; men went about their vocations while horse races, boxing bouts, foot-races and fights were common Sunday amusements. So absorbed in their own affairs and sports did this border populace become, that they actually lost track of the days of the week and were only reminded of Sunday when the up-river men, who got out timber for Momence's only industry, the saw mill, came down to town in force to spend one big, glad riotous day in seven. All classes previously mentioned in this heterogeneous mixture of frontier types, regarded the picturesque log-roller with feel- of genuine awe and respect at such times as he invaded their precincts and disported in riotous abandon. Ample leeway at the bar was left for him; the movable articles about the house which would have proved formidable in case of a rough and tumble, were shunted into the clear; the poker game retired to less conspicuous quarters on the appearance of the first installment of visiting "lumber-jacks." Altogether, the action was very much like when a ship battens down her hatches, trims her sails and makes everything safe and snug in the face of approaching squall.

The frontiersmen tacitly admitted by these acts of precaution that here was a case where an irresistible force was more than likely to come in contact with an immovable body and, to avoid the dire consequences of such a clash, they quietly ebbed to the open spaces of the great out of doors and looked on while the up-river boys took over the place and proceeded to drink themselves "stone-blind." Numerous clashes had taken place between these irreconcilable forces of the frontier, but to no purpose. The rivermen, cocky and smiling, flaunted his challenge in the face and eyes of all comers. His very presence in town was an invitation to fight. And, when he fought, he was a human wild-cat who observed no law or rule, but considered any means fair that enabled him to vanquish his opponent.

The town boys recalled only too bitterly that their champion came out of the last set-to with a thumb "chewed off," or nearly so, and with one ear elongated and drooping for all the world like that of a "pot-lickin' hound." And, supposedly, there were rules, agreed to before hand, governing this fight, which queensberry himself would have approved of. Decidedly they were a bad lot and not to be trusted. For years the question of supremacy was an open one with the odds laying noticeably in the direction of "up-river". In the vernacular of the old town of the border at a time when polished phrase languished in the background and only vigorous, resounding superlative thrived, these rivermen were characterized as "an ornery, low-lived set, of the damndest, most orneriest stripe!" With this high and lofty declaration, those who were wont to make the old town ring with the echoes of their noisy carousal and mad pranks during six days and nights of the week, quietly relinquished their places on the seventh day and-the sad truth must be admitted--hunted their holes.

They were gainers in one respect, however. While the ancient Chaldeans reckoned their time from the stars, these old-town people reckoned theirs from the day the rivermen "got through raisin' hell!" That day was always Monday, but the count was often hopelessly mixed by the time next Sunday arrived. Do you wonder that Momence had a bad name? Do you marvel that the leaven of good as represented by the few God-fearing families of the neighborhood took so long to permeate the mass and leaven the whole lump?

Time, no less than nature, works his wonders. The softening influence of time is easily discerned in the old town of today. There is a noticeable polish, an air of dignity, an unmistakable refinement, an all-pervading prosperousness that conveys a charming sense of poise, serenity and general well being. Decidedly the passing years have not been unkind. But, at mention of her wild and woolly days, methinks she stirs uneasily and lifts a hand deprecatingly as if to say: "Now, for Heaven's sake, do be careful! The past is gone; the past is dead--why trouble to dig it up?" Why dig it up indeed? Only that sometimes one travels far from the beaten paths of home to sense the atmosphere of old days; to glimpse the red-blood spirit of the frontier before the iron had been leached from it; to hob-knob with the shades of those erstwhile giants who, standing on the threshold of civilization, acknowledged God yet feared no man.

Momence, then, had all the elements that went to make a border town. She had all color, action and picturesqueness so characteristic of border days when law was a myth, restraint unknown and whose best man, picked from the varied types of the wilderness, was admitted to be he who could swear the loudest, hit the hardest, drink the most liquor and owned the best "race hoss." By degrees we have sought to bring the reader to a realization that Momence, way, way back, in the times of the brush and the big timber, was about as tough as the toughest of them. The fact that it was tough was not a pleasing recommendation altogether. It should not be gathered from these remarks that we would glorify the fact unduly. No, indeed! We are content to follow in the wake of others who have served mankind by immortalizing the bold deeds of the border in song, and verse, and story. Therefore, to this end, the shades of old-time traditions, once rich and colorful that still lurk, phantom-like, on the borderland of memory--faded, besought to tell their story--just this once.

"THE UPPER CROSSING OF THE KANKAKEE"

"So come, good men who toil and tire,
Who smoke and sip the kindly cup,
Ring round about the tavern fire
Ere yet you drink your liquor up;
And hear my simple tales of earth,
Of youth and truth and living things;
Of poverty and proper mirth,
Of rags and rich imaginings."

Robert W. SERVICE

There is no spot in all eastern Illinois more redolent of memories of frontier days than that spot known as the "Metcalf Farm," situated one mile east of the present city of Momence on the Kankakee River. Here the first white settlement in Eastern Illinois took place as far back as ninety years ago, all because a well defined indian trail dipped down the north bank to the river and emerged again on the south bank, indicating to the solitary trapper with his pack or the lone pioneer traveler with his ox team that here was a safe and convenient ford. Scarcely a mile away to the southwest on the river where the city of Momence of today is located, were two other fords thirty rods apart where the limestone "hog-back" of the river bed lifted sufficiently to make transportation easy and safe.

Three ideal fording places located within a mile was something very unusual. Nature truly was prodigal with her favors in this as well as other respects. A convenient river ford in the old wilderness days was quite as important an adjunct to a locality as the railroad afterwards became. All lines of travel north and south of the river converged towards this segment of the Kankakee with its three fords. Chicago was the objective of the frontiersman from the Danville country, the Wabash country of Central Indiana. During the thirties, the forties and the early fifties the stream of travel to and from the growing metropolis of Chicago grew in volume. Mainly these travelers used the ford nearest the Indiana state-line and called it the "Upper Crossing," thus distinguishing it from the two farther west of Momence.

In March of 1831, when Cook county was organized, its southern boundary was the Kankakee River and its eastern boundary the Indiana state-line. In the year 1833 Chicago voted to incorporate as a village, and in the fall of that same year the settlement at "Upper Crossing" was inaugurated. The first house built in what is now eastern Kankakee county was on the farm since owned by Silas METCALF, located on the north side of the river. It was built by William LACY. LACY came from Danville, Illinois, with James VAN KIRK, who drove from Danville settlement to Chicago with a load of produce.

The quartering of a large number of soldiers in Chicago incident to the Black Hawk war, made provisions scarce and dear at that point and that induced VAN KIRK and LACY to brave the privations and dangers of an overland trip through the almost unknown country. Both VAN KIRK and LACY were deeply impressed with the beauty and natural advantages of this site on the Kankakee and, on their return, they stopped. As related, LACY built the cabin on the METCALF place and stayed there during the winter. Mr. VAN KIRK started a cabin on the head of the island nearby and carried up the walls almost to the roof when he departed. He expected to return the following year and perfect his claim but, for some reason did not do so. LACY sold his claim a year or two later and thus failed to become a permanent resident of the settlement of which he was the founder.
